

Tunisia's economy has seen both growth and challenges in recent years. While inflation has been a persistent concern, the government has introduced measures aimed at stabilizing key sectors such as agriculture and manufacturing. The national unemployment rate remains steady, though the government continues to work on job creation initiatives in emerging sectors like digital services and renewable energy.